The report of the Postmaster General con-BOYS' AND CHILDREN'S DAY. tains a number of important statements about the working of the department and of valuable suggestions for the future. One of the most interesting of the topics treated concerns the extension of the merit system of promotions, recently put in operation, to the larger post offices and the railway mail service. Another is the recommendation to adapt the telephone as well as the telegraph to the postal system. The reasons for speedy action are stated compendiously and include the fact that the telephone patent expires a year from next March, and unless Congress acts promptly an immense syndicate will control all of the telephone plants in the country. The Postmaster General says that one-cent letter postage, three-cent telephone messages and ten-cent telegraph messages are all near possibilities under an enlightened and compact postal system, using the newest telegraphic inventions. Among other recommen-

Mr. Wanamaker adds some features to his last year's plan of a postal savings bank. Quite a number of these suggestions are practicable at present and should be carried out by The Postmaster General, in discussing the temporary city post office on G street, says: FAULTLESS IN FIT. What Washington needs is a commission of citizens, engineers, members of Congress and perhaps cabinet officers to suggest how some wise, economical and far-sceing plan for the erection of needed public buildings might be accomplished according to a definite, artistic, bustness-like plan. It would mean a saving in the end of $20,000,000 perhaps; and meantime the architectural hodgepodge, whose only merit is its infrequency, would disappear, and the executive departments would be housed in buildings owned by the government and form-It is hoped that Congress will give heed to these words of practical wisdom, recommending a liberality which is true economy. The systematic substitution of suitable, convenient and handsome buildings owned by the government for rented quarters is not only what Washington needs, but what the government and the republic need.
